AFLS Response to COVID-19

Aboriginal Family Law Services (“AFLS”) is continuing to provide quality legal services to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander survivors of domestic, family and sexual violence in regional Western Australia amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

We are committed to providing ongoing legal services to our clients and community members however the health and safety of our staff, clients and community remains our top priority.

During this time, we have taken steps to ensure our services can continue whilst minimising health risks. Employees who return to Western Australia from overseas or interstate and employees who have been in contact with a confirmed case of COVID-19 are required to self-isolate for 14 days. Any employee who is experiencing flu like symptoms will immediately self-isolate and seek medical direction. Staff are self-distancing within our offices and we ask clients to keep a distance of at least two (2) metres from others when attending our offices to minimise person-to-person contact.

We have implemented additional cleaning regimes within our offices to minimise the risk of transmission of COVID-19 to staff and clients.

Although we are minimising our direct contact with each other, clients and community members, we are committed to providing ongoing legal services via telephone and email where possible. If you require assistance, please contact our offices by telephone and we can respond appropriately.

AFLS is continuing to monitor the impact of COVID-19 and we are taking all necessary precautions to ensure the health and safety of our staff, clients and the community whilst maintaining our commitment to delivering quality legal services.

Any changes to our service will be made available through our website, Facebook page and by letters sent to our clients.

Helping to prevent family violence for a safer community.
